Child health problems is one of the main problems in the health sector that currently occurs in Indonesia. In the Child Health Efforts, an active role of the community is needed both individually and in organized way, the active role of the community can be done through integrated service center cadres. The purpose of this research is to identify the role of cadre in early detection of child growth and development. This research is a descriptive case study with 3 research subjects. This study uses guided open interview technique and observation of integrated service center activities in the data collection. The data presented in the form of narration. The results showed that subject I and subject II had done their role quite well and subject III had done her role well. The result of observation of integrated service center activity is quite good, done routinely. Recommendations for further research is to know the role of parents tin the growth and development of children because parents always meet and interact with their children.
